A21 Tonbridge to Pembury upgrade moves forward

The Highways Agency is to resume the statutory process for a multi-million pound upgrade to the A21 in Kent, transport minister Stephen Hammond announced today (Tuesday 30 October).

Under the Highways Agency's plans, a 2.5 mile section of the A21 between Tonbridge and Pembury in Kent would be upgraded from single to dual carriageway, adding a lane in each direction, upgrading junctions and improving the road layout.

The infrastructure investment in the major road scheme would make journeys on the A21 safer and more reliable and bring economic benefits estimated at more than £400m.

Today's announcement paves the way for the project to progress to the next stage in its delivery, with a public inquiry for the major scheme now possible as early as next May and – subject to a successful outcome from the inquiry - a potential start date for construction in 2015.

Transport minister Stephen Hammond said:

"We will shortly be restarting the statutory process for the A21 Tonbridge to Pembury dualling scheme with the intention of the Public Inquiry taking place in May 2013. Formal Notice of the intention to hold a Public Inquiry will be issued in November and details of the venue, exact date and sitting times for the Inquiry will follow in due course."

Between 2010 and 2015, the Highways Agency is starting work on 20 major improvement schemes, subject to statutory processes. Together, they will deliver billions of pounds worth of economic benefits, improving safety and journey times on the country's major roads. In May this year, the Government announced development funding for six further schemes – including the A21 improvements – to help ensure that they can be delivered as soon as possible after 2015.

In November, the Highways Agency will publish formal notice of the intention to hold a Public Inquiry for the A21 Tonbridge to Pembury major road scheme. Dates, times and venue for the inquiry will then follow in due course.

Notes To Editors

1. The Highways Agency is an executive agency of the Department for Transport. We manage, maintain and improve England's motorways and other strategic roads on behalf of the Secretary of State.
